Biographie de l'auteur
A big fan of off-the-beaten-path travel, Regis St Louis has fallen hard for the tropical islands and remote villages of Papua New Guinea. On this trip, he took over a dozen flights hopping across the New Guinea Islands, walked a long stretch of the Kokoda Track and took countless banana boat rides across often-rough seas. He also celebrated with Alotau residents at the magnificent Mine Bay Canoe and Kundu Festival. lingered on deserted islands in Kundu Bay and caught an impromptu singsing at the paramount chiefs village in the Trobriands. A longtime travel writer, Regis has contributed to over 30 Lonely Planet titles. He lives in Brooklyn, New York. Paris-based journalist and photographer Jean-Bernard Carillet is a die-hard island lover and diving instructor. He has clocked up numerous trips to the South Pacific, including four assignments to the Solomon Islands. On this research gig he searched for the best dive sites, the most thrilling adventure tours and the best value accommodations. His favourite experiences included swimming with dugongs off Tetepare Island, diving the reefs around Kicha Island and crossing Marovo Lagoon by boat. Jean-Bernard has contributed to many Lonely Planet titles, in French and in English, and coordinated Lonely Planet diving guides. He also writes for travel and dive magazines. Dean Starnes first visited PNG in 2007 when he worked on the 8th edition of this guide and has been biding his time until he could return ever since. No stranger to off-the-map travel (he has also worked on Lonely Planet guides covering Rwanda, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Kyrgyzstan, Burundi and Mongolia), he finds the cultural divers genuinely hospitable people and rugged scenery hard to beat. When he's not writing for Lonely Planet, Dean lives in New Zealand with his wife and his wife's cat (the cat's not thrilled about that arrangement).
